WHAT IS A CLICHÉ?

One of the most common problems I see in my students' and coaching clients' writing is the use of clichés. The dreaded clichés—they're the death knell of good writing.

What is a cliché?

A cliché is an expression, often a comparison but not always, that at one time was clever and original but has become overused. The phrase, "cool as a cucumber," for example, is a cliché.

I'm sure whoever said "cool as a cucumber" the very first time was considered quite clever and brilliant. People obviously thought the phrase was clever because they began using it. Thousands and eventually millions of people used it. I bet the originators of some of the most common clichés wish they could get paid every time someone uses their clever little phrase.

Not all clichés are comparisons. Some are simply combinations of words that are used so often, they've become old to the point of being grating—sort of like the verbal equivalent of tapping the same spot on your hand over and over. Have you ever done that? It's quite annoying.

"Last but not least," "tried and true," and "trial and error" are examples of these overused phrases. They add nothing to a sentence, and yet people use them constantly.

WHAT'S SO BAD ABOUT CLICHÉS?

So why are clichés so dreaded in writing? Why do you want to avoid them? Here are the six ways clichés can diminish the quality of your work:

Clichés make your work less original. Good writing is original and fresh. If you fill your writing with clichés, it's going to sound old and worn out.

Writing filled with clichés isn't compelling. Compelling writing is writing that grips the reader and compels him or her to keep reading. Why would a reader be gripped by writing filled with phrases the reader has heard a hundred times before?

Clichés distance the reader. Good writing is engaging. It pulls the reader into the subject. When writing is filled with clichés, the reader will start to skim because, again, he or she has seen this stuff before. A skimming reader is not engaged.

Clichés are the mark of an amateur writer. They scream "Beginner!" Professional writers know they need to fill their writing with sparkle and freshness. Beginners have a tendency to regurgitate what they've heard or read before.

Clichés dilute the impact of your expertise and credibility. If you have cliché-filled work, people will assume you don't know what you're doing. If you can't come up with something better than an overused phrase, how can your information be worthwhile?

Clichés are a giveaway of laziness. When writing is filled with clichés, it's obvious the writer has grabbed whatever phrase has popped into his head the first time around. Cliché-filled writing will never come across as accomplished and polished.

Rich, unique writing that has its own original style is not filled with clichés or overused expressions. Don't brand your writing with as "old and tired." Keep it fresh by keeping out the clichés.

How Do You Keep Clichés Out Of Your Writing?

Keeping clichés out of your writing is a two step process.

1. The first thing you need to do to rid your writing of clichés is to recognize a cliché when you see one.

Here's a little quiz to see if you can recognize common clichés.

What cliché does each of the following pictures represent? (Answers are on page 13).

2. How did you do on the quiz? The seventeen clichés above are just a few of the many expressions that are overused. Here are some more for you to look for in your writing:

A dime a dozen

Acid test

Artistic license

At loose ends

Babe in the woods

Better late than never

Brought back to reality

Black as pitch

Blind as a bat

Bolt from the blue

Bright idea

Busy as a bee

Busy as a beaver

Cat's meow

Climb the ladder to success

Cloud nine

Cool as a cucumber

Cool, calm, and collected

Crack of dawn

Cross your fingers

Crushing blow

Cry over spilt milk

Dead as a doornail

Dog-eat-dog world

Don't count your chickens

Don't put all your eggs in one basket

Dyed in a wool

Easier said than done

Easy as pie

Feathered friends

Face the music

Flash in the pan

Flat as a pancake

Flushing money down the drain

Gentle as a lamb

Go at it tooth and nail

Good time was had by all

Greased lightning

Happy as a lark

Head over heels

Heart sings

Heavy as lead

Home is where the heart is

Horns of a dilemma

Hour of need

Keep a stiff upper lip

Ladder of success

Last but not least

Leave no stone unturned

Looking a gift horse in the mouth

Meaningful dialogue

Money doesn't grow on trees

Moving experience

Needle in a haystack

Open-and-shut case

Pain in the _____

Pencil pushers

Penny for your thoughts

Point with pride

Pot of gold at the end of the rainbow

Pretty as a picture

Put it in a nutshell

Quick as a flash/wink

Rat race

Ripe old age

Ruled the roast

Sad but true

Sadder but wiser

Seeing dollar signs

Set the world on fire

Sick as a dog

Sigh of relief

Skeletons in the closet

Slow as molasses

Smart as a whip

Sneaking suspicion

Splitting hairs

Spread like wildfire

Straight as an arrow

Straw that broke

Swift kick in the pants

Swimming with the sharks

The camel's back

Strong as an ox

Take the bull by the horns

The early bird gets the worm

Thin as a rail

Through thick and thin

Time is money

Tired but happy

To coin a phrase

To make a long story short

Tongue tied

Trial and error

Tried and true

Turn back time

Under the weather

Wear your heart on your sleeve

White as a sheet

Wise as an owl

Wolf in sheep's clothing

Work like a dog

Worth its weight in gold

You can identify many more clichés if you pay attention to what you hear people saying and what you hear on radio and TV. Start keeping a little cliché book. Jot down the phrases that you hear often. These are phrases that either are clichés or will soon be clichés. You want to avoid them.

2. The second part of getting clichés out of your writing is knowing what to do when you spot a cliché in your work.

When you realize you've used a cliché, circle it and then ask yourself what word or phrase you could use to instead. What is a more original way of saying what you're trying to say?

For example, look at the cliché, "worked like a dog."

Wouldn't it be better to simply replace the phrase with a more appropriate verb, a more specific verb like labored or toiled? If you want to use a comparison, brainstorm a few that might work for what you're trying to say.

For example, to replace "worked like a dog, you could try

"worked like a man promised a million dollar bonus for extra hours"

or

"worked like a lion wanting to avoid the whip"

These aren't great, but at least they're different. Replace your clichés with something different, then go back and make sure that something different makes sense and fits the piece you're writing.

For instance, you wouldn't want to use my second example in a sweet, romantic story. Fit your comparison to what's around it.

If you can keep your writing free of clichés, you'll have better quality writing. Better quality writing sells. Get rid of those dreaded clichés!
